Older adults utilize more health care services than various other populations due to the complex nature of their health care needs. As acuity in health conditions increase, experienced care providers such as Certified Nurse Aides (CNAs) will be needed to offer hands-on care including care for the treatment of complex conditions. CNAs are essential caregivers, providing care that directly impacts resident outcomes. CNAs are currently only trained to provide a basic level of care and are not permitted to handle complex care tasks. CNAs do not have a scope of practice but manage care under the guidance of the 42 CFR § 483. There is not a clear understanding of what are the allowable delegated activities for the CNA beyond that of the basic skills. The variation of allowable care tasks per state may result in confusion of what are the overall CNA job roles or scope. This dissertation described what are the allowable delegated activities for CNAs working in nursing facility settings. Further, this work determined if there was a difference in the clinical outcomes in states that had a basic versus states that had an expanded scope of practice for CNAs, and this dissertation described the self-efficacy expectations and care tasks performed among CNAs. Findings suggest that all states within the United States allow CNAs to manage basic care tasks, and 11 states allow CNAs to manage expanded care tasks. Findings also indicate that there was no difference in clinical outcomes, specifically the outcomes of ADLs, falls with major injury, restraint use, and pain when compared to the allowable care tasks managed by CNAs in each state. Finally, CNAs who worked in states that allowed for expanded care tasks had a stronger self-efficacy for performing expanded tasks when compared to CNAs who worked in states that only allow CNAs to manage basic tasks.

There is an increased use of technology and informatics, heavier workloads and constant changes in the way in which disease processes are managed. Yet, when compared with other health professionals, nurses still spend a great deal of time in direct contact with patients and clients. They stay at the bedside, listen to their stories, give comfort and advocate. The Ethic of Care: A Moral Compass for Canadian Nursing Practice is unique from other nursing ethics textbooks in several key ways. The book adds a heightened dimension to the already rich knowledge in the field of applied nursing ethics and the ethic of care. The author argues that the ethic of care, or the moral imperative to act justly, be the guiding compass for everything that nurses do. It is with passion and conviction that nurses are encouraged to embody the ethic of care as a "lived virtue." Nurses are also inspired to be the leaders of tomorrow by working toward achieving accountability and sustainability in the Canadian publicly funded health care system and by effectively addressing social inequities. At the end of each chapter the author conveys real life case studies, as derived from her experiences as a critical care nurse, psychiatric nurse clinician and former Coroner. These vignettes bring the subject to life and serve as a means for applying newly acquired ethical knowledge. The aim of this book is to inspire nurses to be as skillful, and compassionate as they can be so that they will leave every encounter with their clients, better than when they first arrived. The book attempts to inspire nurses to be ethical leaders for social change at the patient/client, community and global level. This revised edition of the book includes additional information about trauma-informed care to combat systemic racism and improve the health outcomes for Indigenous people; ethics, gender and sexual orientation is dealt with in an inclusive and sensitive way, and a new Code of Conduct has been included.

Nurses make up the largest segment of the health care profession, with 3 million registered nurses in the United States. Nurses work in a wide variety of settings, including hospitals, public health centers, schools, and homes, and provide a continuum of services, including direct patient care, health promotion, patient education, and coordination of care. They serve in leadership roles, are researchers, and work to improve health care policy. As the health care system undergoes transformation due in part to the Affordable Care Act (ACA), the nursing profession is making a wide-reaching impact by providing and affecting quality, patient-centered, accessible, and affordable care. In 2010, the Institute of Medicine (IOM) released the report The Future of Nursing: Leading Change, Advancing Health, which made a series of recommendations pertaining to roles for nurses in the new health care landscape. This current report assesses progress made by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation/AARP Future of Nursing: Campaign for Action and others in implementing the recommendations from the 2010 report and identifies areas that should be emphasized over the next 5 years to make further progress toward these goals.
