One story, two viewpoints, multiple possibilities. The shepherd and the wolf have always lived on the same mountain. They know each other's existence and at the same time share the resources and everything on the mountain. They seem to be hostile towards each other, but in fact, their relationship is closer than imagined... This book features pros and cons narrative techniques, using two different protagonists to tell the same story, flip the book over and you can see the different perspectives of the shepherd and the wolf respectively. With the transformation of the image and the angle, two completely different versions are magically presented.
